CHARACTER IN LAUGHTER.

Traits Shown by Great Men When Pleased.

What an index to character is man's laugh! What surer clue can we have to both his intellect and his temper unless it be that he seldom or never laughs? "Nothing," says Goethe, "is more significant of man's character than what they find laughable." "You know me, man," says Tiesck, "till you have heard him laugh—till you know when and how he will laugh." "The perception of the ludicrous," says Emerson, "is a pledge of sanity. A rogue alive to the ludicrous is still convertible. If that sense is lost, his fellow-men can do little for him." Lavater, the great physiognomist, lays his great stress on the very unequivocal and derisive nature of a laugh as an index of character. If it be free and hearty and occasion a general and light movement in all the features, and dimple the cheek and chin, it is an almost infallible evidence of the absence of any great material weakness of disposition." Caesar mistrusted Cassius because that lean and hungry conspirator rarely, if ever, indulged in laughter. When Horace Walpole was in Paris in 1765 he found that laughing was out of fashion in that gay capital. "Good folks," he writes, "they have no time to laugh. There are God and the king to be pulled down first; and men and women, one and all, are devoutly employed in the demolition."

How often a man fails to betray the tiger that lurks within him until he laughs! Is there nothing significant in the fact recorded by Plutarch, of Cato the younger, that his countenance was scarcely softened, even by a smile? It is not a characteristic trait of the gloomy tyrant Philip II of Spain, that he rarely smiled and that he laughed but once in his entire life, and that when he heard of the massacre on St. Bartholomew's day? Is it not a suggestive fact regarding the gloomy, taciturn Wallenstein, the terror of the people—at the sight of whom as he paced through his camp, with his lofty figure enveloped in a scarlet mantle and with a red feather in his cap, a strange horror took possession of the soldiers—that he was never seen to smile? Can we wonder that the poor little dwarf, Alexander Pope—the cynical satirist, afflicted with asthma and dropsy, tortured with rheumatism, racked with headaches and threatened with catalepsy—should never have laughed, but only smiled?

It has been said of the greatest of English dramatists, who united with his intense humor an equally intense, piercing insight into the darkest and most fearful depths of human nature, that no heart would have been strong enough to hold the woe of Lear and Othello, except that which had the unquenchable elasticity of Falstaff and the "Midsummer Night's Dream." Might not a similar remark be made of that "pendulum betwixt a smile and a tear," Abraham Lincoln, in whom sadness and a keen sense of the comic were so strikingly combined? How exuberant was his mirth, sparkling in jest, comic story and anecdote; and yet how often, the very next moment, those sad, pathetic, melancholy eyes showed a man familiar with "sorrow and acquainted with grief."

Who can doubt that but for the merriment in which he indulged—the contagious laughter which welled up from his soul as naturally as do bubbles in the springs of Saratoga—he would have fallen under his weary weight of care long before he fell by the pistol of Booth. It is, indeed, statesmen, students and thinkers generally who most need the relaxation afforded by occasional merriment. Some centuries ago it was the fashion in Europe for men of rank to keep a buffoon, and a banquet was considered incomplete where a privileged jester was not an attendant. This was, perhaps, for those days, a wise custom. It is surprising how much a few minutes' sleep will refresh the body and a few minutes' laughter the mind; and many a useful life might be prolonged by the substitution of the remedies for "caring care" and weariness in place of the usual treacherous tonics and stimulants.

What a dismal deduction would be made from the happiness of our homes, if they were robbed of their merriment! What pictures of innocent mirth has Goldsmith given in the "Vicar of Wakefield," and how artless the remark of the good Dr. Primrose: "If we had little wit, we had plenty of laughter!" What a power for good and evil is the world's "dread laugh, which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn." How many men have been cowed by it, who could have faced without flinching a battery's deadly fire! How many bad customs and wicked practices how many quixotic schemes of philanthropy or reform, how many absurd doctrines in politics, theology and sociology, which have defied the artillery of argument, have been "laughed off the public stage," never to return! Did not Crevanteau "smile Spain's vain and foolish chivalry away."—London Great Thoughts.

Is the Lemon a Luxury?

The committee on ways and means assumes that the lemon is a luxury. Perhaps it is when served in the manner the committee may be in the habit of sampling it.

But there are many other ways and means of regarding this useful fruit.
